Winner of the Lewis Mumford Prize for Best Book Published in American City & Regional Planning History 1995-1997. From the 1920s to the 1950s, Los Angeles did for the shopping center what New York and Chicago had done for the skyscraper. In a single generation, the American retail center shifted from the downtown core to the regional shopping center. This rise of the regional shopping center is one of the most significant changes to the American city in the 20th century, and no other American city has done as much as Los Angeles to spur that change. Ten years in the making, Center to Regional Mall is a sweeping yet detailed account of the development of the regional shopping center. Richard Longstreth takes an historical perspective, relating retail development to broader architectural, urban, and cultural issues. His story is far from linear; the topics he covers include the emergence of Hollywood as a downtown in miniature, experiments with the shopping center as an amenity of planned residential developments, the branch department store as a landmark of decentralization, the evolution of off-street parking facilities, and the obscure origins of the pedestrian spine for retail complexes. Longstreth takes seriously the task of looking at retail buildings--one of the most neglected common building types--and the economics of real estate in the American city. He shows that Los Angeles in the period covered was a harbinger of American metropolitan trends during the second half of this century. Over 250 illustrations culled from a wide variety of sources, constitute one of the best collections of old LA photographs published anywhere.

Explores the past, present, and future position of women managers in each of the respective European Community states, not only detailing the most recent available employment statistics, but also helping to unravel some of the reasons for similarities and differences between member states. In particular, the authors examine the problems and barriers encountered by women in business and management in their respective countries, and suggest ways of reducing these problems so that the opportunities to enter business and management, and climb up the corporate ladder, are as accessible to women as to men.
